Dear Birth Mother,

There are simply not enough words in the English language to express our gratitude, love, and respect to you for giving us the honor and the privilege to raise your child. We will forever be indebted and eternally grateful to you for your generous spirit and open heart. You are making our dreams to love a child become our reality.

We can promise you that your child will be loved unconditionally in a happy, safe, loving, and nurturing home. Your unselfish and selfless act to share your child with us will forever enrich our lives. You are our guardian angel.

Brian and Stacy met in Chicago. We were blindsided by our mutual attraction to each other, and sheer enjoyment of each other's company. Our personalities, interests, backgrounds, and beliefs complement one another. Our courtship lasted two years. Brian lived in a house in the suburbs, and Stacy rented an apartment in downtown Chicago. We took turns visiting each other on the weekends, so that we could enjoy both locations.

Our time in the city was spent going to Broadway shows, visiting museums, attending concerts and training for the Chicago half-marathon. Brian was able to meet Stacy's sister because; she too, lived in the city at the time. We also spent time with Stacy's friends at neighborhood eateries and local street fairs.

The time spent in the suburbs was different, but equally rewarding. We spent our time going to the movies, visiting the zoo, bike riding through the forest preserves, and participating in local 5k and 10k runs. Stacy was able to meet Brian's immediate and extended family. He was surrounded by his parents, his grandmother, his brother, and several aunts, uncles, and cousins. There was always something fun planned on the weekends, whether it was a holiday, birthday, shower, or anniversary.

Stacy knew that their relationship had deepened when she took him to meet her parents and childhood friends in Ohio. All of her loved ones immediately welcomed Brian into their hearts. They observed that he was handsome, friendly, polite, well spoken, and he treated Stacy with love and respect. He was a true gentleman. They all hoped that this courtship would become an engagement. Their wish, as well as Stacy's hope, finally came true.

Brian proposed to Stacy after two years of dating. Stacy was overjoyed. She said yes. After years of living alone, we finally had been blessed with finding our soul mate and closest friend for life. Our wedding had a tropical theme because we both love the sunshine and the beach. Our colorful flowers enhanced the beauty and joy of our special day. Our wedding was a celebration of our friendship, love, trust, and commitment to each other.

Stacy moved into Brian's house, and together we made it our home. The day after we returned home from our honeymoon, we added a dog to our lives. We named our little furry bundle of love Aloha. Aloha means love in Hawaiian. She is the love of our lives, although she takes full advantage of being spoiled.

We immediately tried to start a family. After several visits to fertility doctors, we discovered that we were unable to conceive. We knew that we wanted to become parents, so that is when we started the adoption process. We are hoping and praying that we have a successful adoption because we are ready to embrace and love a child.

Brian grew up knowing that he wanted to get married and have a family. He has enjoyed bonding with his godson, and his nephew. His work colleagues have included us at their kids' birthday parties, as well as sporting events. We have enjoyed attending hockey games and family functions with our friends' and families' children, but we are ready to become parents ourselves.

Stacy has spent many years and summers interacting with children. She has been a camp counselor at a Christian Camp, and also a French Language Counselor at an International Camp. She has taught both elementary and high school kids, and she has privately tutored kids in French and German.

Brian and Stacy will make a child the center of our world. We are spellbound with innocence and pure love that a child has to offer and share.

Brian and Stacy are dependable, kind, honest, generous, and faithful. We will strive to nurture the child with an abundance of love and affection. Our Christian values will instill a healthy and creative environment to foster the child's growth and potential. We will devote our energies, financial resources, and endless love to ensure that the child is happy, well adjusted, and adored.

Brian works in finances, and he is financially responsible. He will always be able to provide a home for his family. He is loyal, good-natured, and kind. His compassionate personality and his sincerity will provide the qualities to help him become a good father. He will encourage the child's happiness above everything, and he will cherish the child's individuality and unique qualities.

Stacy is a flight attendant and substitute teacher. She is friendly, fun, loyal, sensitive, and thoughtful. She will embrace motherhood because she wants to devote her life to a child. She will expose the child to new and fun experiences, offer guidance, and encourage the child to embrace life. She is an avid reader. She values education, creativity, and imagination. She will instill a love of learning, travelling, and laughing.

Stacy will stay home to raise the child. She and Brian will both be active and involved in the child's upbringing. We will passionately devote our lives, time, and hearts to the child. Our community also offers excellent schools, as well as a wonderful library. There is an endless wealth of activities for families to experience; ranging from storytelling at the library, to outdoor festivals, hayrides, farmer's markets, picnic areas, numerous playgrounds, and a zoo. We will take family vacations and plan fun weekend getaways.

Brian and Stacy are aware of the sacrifice that you are making. We are honored and grateful to be considered as adoptive parents. We are excited and hopeful that our prayers of becoming a family have been answered. We thank you for your gift to us.
